Sound Listening Assignment Oct. 1, 2015:
Onomatopoeias

It's good to start keeping track of the sounds we hear. Listen to the sounds around you, and try to break down their components. Let's start this way:

What was the first sound you heard this morning?

What was the last sound you heard last night before sleeping?

What was the loudest sound you heard today?

What was the most beautiful sound you heard today?

Now try to describe each phonetically as a word or words. Don't suffer over this. There's no right way to do it. Just invent two or three words for each sound that recreate it in some way.
